Black Metal is, historically, an extreme and experimental underground Metal music subculture, formed during the late 1980s in Norway, that is signified by heaviness, obscurity, dark mysticism, and raw disruptions. In the 21st century, Black Metal emerged as a language used by many contemporary visual artists. This thesis engages with the recent international discourse of Black Metal theory to imagine an art history of Black Metal. It identifies Black Metal as a significant subject matter and referent in contemporary artworks by three American artists- Grant Willing (b. 1987), Terence Hannum (b. 1979), and Banks Violette (b. 1973)-and explores how Black Metal's presence is signified across artistic media by spaces that are formless, undefined, seemingly empty, or void.
