Modern military operations drastically changed when the first Private Military Corporations (PMCs) appeared on the world market of military service in 1960s, PMCs have made a long way since their first appearance on the market of the military service, now spreading their influence worldwide and becoming active participants in modern warfare and international security. They provide security services in the most dangerous places on the earth and they are the irreplaceable reality of modern military security. However, PMCs are also considered a contradictive phenomenon in the modern military world. Besides high security level and professionalism, very often they become infamous participants of bloody events and criminal records. The aim of this book is to give an answer to the following question: do Private Military Companies influence military operations and international security? While giving an answer to that question, this book will also touch on the probable future of PMCs.
