Not illustrated. 1759 Excerpt: ...day, why should you be surprized that they happen to you?--If it Was your vice or weakness, which brought this evil upon you, have patience; if your virtue occasioned it, look up to heaven, and wait till your cause is judged. Were men to execute private, vindictive justice on each other, the world would be a scene of blood. You will often see that those who do not restrain their wrath, nor appeal to the laws of their country, when such appeals are absolutely necessary, often destroy each other, on account of the most fristing incidents. 10. Injure no person by word or deed, and meditate on the golden rule. Do as you would, or in reason think you ought, to be done by.--Neither suffer any one to be injured by word or deed, when it is mycur power to prevent it. Of all the foolish customs of the world, there are none which betray greater foolishness of heart, than (b) This is either in manuscript or print, and pasted into their book. a hasty 3r a hasty belief of idle or scandalous reports of others, whether high or low, rich or poor. To condemn unheard, and to judge of things from reports of ignorant or prejudiced persons, is unjust, as well as foolish: to once you receive right information, you will be ten times in a mistake. Besides, credulity, or believing every thing you hear, is an argument of a very weak head, if not a bad heart. 11. Be a Dutiful Son; comfort your parents in sickness and let it be your chief care to cherish them in old age, that they may lay down their hoary heads in peace, and bless you with their last breath. Be careful not to offend them by word or deed. Thus God will undoubtedly bless you, and give you a long life, as is promised in the fifth commandment: be well assured of this, and that no rule of human prudence can be more safely ...
