This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1875 Excerpt: ... Next, taking up the sulphuretted hydrogen by a normal metallic salt, so selected or so managed as to give up no water or acid vapor to the desiccated gas. Next, using sodic hydrate to absorb the CO<sub>2</sub>, with certain precautions described below. Next, alkalized pyrogallol or other suitable agent, to absorb oxygen, arranged so as to lose no water. In the case of illuminating gases--with some few others--the final (rouajh) measurement of the gas is then made at an observed temperature by a gas meter; if with a dry meter, directly; if with a wet meter, after saturation with moisture at the temperature of melting ice. In the latter case, of a wet meter, the amount of final moisture in the gas is determined by a reiterated desiccation with CaCl. The whole process is finally completed and the separations rendered as sharp as may be, by a process of distillation, either at the ordinary or higher temperature, in a current of the same gas analyzed, that has been previously subjected to the same or similar treatment, and thus freed from all the ingredients to be separated from each other. After final weighings, the correct initial volume of the gaseous mixture is calculated by certain formulae derived, as specified below, from the crude meter indications and the final weighings. I shall now proceed to an attempt to explain simultaneously, to save space, the details of the methods as applied to each constituent, and those of the construction, preparation and arrangement of the different pieces of apparatus, as connected and represented in the figures. I. Analysis Of Crude Gas, In The Gas-house, Before Purification. The mechanically suspended Tar and Water.--The joint devices for arresting these two substances, in the first instance, are shown in Fig. 1, letters A to F in...
