As a kid I was brought up in the Catholic Church. I thought it was a good thing for society to have religious standards but then I realized I have my own natural, inherent moral code inside of me.

Some parts of the Bible contradict each other like the jealous God of the Old Testament who suddenly saw the wrong of His ways and became loving in the New Testament which is kinda funny if God is divinely wise.

There are many rules in the Old Testament condemning people to death for trivial transgressions. They accepted slavery as a part of normal life in the Old Testament.

Who did Cain and Abel marry if they were the children of the first man and woman on Earth?

On the Vision Channel in Canada, I was watching a Hindu music video where they were all dancing and praising a statue that looked like Mary and the baby Jesus. They looked foolish but what they were doing was no different than what Christians do.

I eventually realized I don't care about the world's holy books. The Ten Commandments gave us absolute moral standards which is good but I just have to listen to myself to feel God, the divine Creator inside of me, working through me even though He gave me free will to disobey him. Live by what's good in your true nature and you honor God.

I concluded I have an eternal soul after having what I believe were supernatural experiences where I felt an evil force was trying to get me to do evil things to myself when I was doing cocaine. This voice I heard inside of me that seemed to come from beyond me sobered me up right away. When you have an experience with the alleged other side and you think it's real, you don't mess around anymore.

Some people close to me died. I must have watched at least 400 youtube videos about near death experiences, guardian angels, demon possession, etc. As you pass 50, you realize being an atheist is lonely.

God gave me my free essence as a human being. The best I can do is to honor it.

In the Book of Genesis, they say God breathed into Adam to give him life, implying that He shot some divine, mystical spark into him that made him come alive.

This is the great mystery of life; what exactly gives us this esthetic-spiritual consciousness known as life. It goes beyond just chemical formulas and biological theories. I feel this unique essence, spirit or soul within me. If there is anything divine about me, this is it, this invisible essence that is me.

If God created me, I owe it to Him to be the best specimen I can be to honor this piece of handiwork He made me to be. That's the way I think just to keep my life simple and to feel connected to whatever is divine in the Universe, if anything.

The best I can do is believe in my soul because if there's anything divine about me, this is it. Beyond that, I don't want to believe in anything written or created by other people, even if it is supposedly divinely inspired.

I believe that organized religion, psychobabble (the so-called science of human behaviour), pop culture entertainment, the capitalist ideology and all that New Age mumbo jumbo where people are worshipping just about anything out there destroy a great many lives because a lot of empty, weak people give up control of their lives to some external deity or so-called authority in order to get some hope, comfort, love, inspiration or whatever it is they're looking for but this goes against everything free spiritism stands for.

What I believe about God, human nature and the purpose of life is all tied together in this intuitive, instinctive feeling I have about living by my soul, trusting it and honoring it because if there is anything divine in the Universe that I'm sure of, it's my soul or essence as a human being.

I escaped death several times. Was that random luck or God watching out for me?

Somebody said there is no atheist in a foxhole. It's true. Notice all those death-row inmates converting to God.

I accept my human wea
