A Country Christmas Rachel Maldonado

Alex Townsend has come a long way from her small country town of Kingston, Texas. Having left her small town life behind when she left for college, she's spent nearly twenty years living in New York City working as a journalist for the New York Times. When her father suffers a massive heart attack, she flies home to Kingston to take care of his land until he recuperates. In the process, she meets a woman, Kelly Douglas, who's almost half her age and lives and works on the Christmas tree farm next door. They each have an immediate attraction to one another, but having attended school with Alex in her youth, Kelly's mother has a secret of her own to share. Will sparks fly? And, more importantly, with whom?
