James Hardy is a happy man. His business is thriving, his family is happy, and he's married to a woman he just can't get enough of ... that is until she decides cooking is the best way to his heart.

That's right, Mandy Avery-Hardy is taking a cooking class – and everyone needs to duck and cover, because she's serious about getting it right. When an old foe shows up in the class, and Southeastern Michigan is inundated with a series of storms, though, things swiftly get out of hand.

James is a man happiest when he has his wife on his lap and a takeout menu in his hand, but he would never deny Mandy what she truly wants – even when he's afraid the endeavor might leave her a little crazed.

When danger converges on the Hardy family in the form of a deadly storm, James will do anything to get to his wife while the other family members struggle to stay safe on their own.

Between a cooking instructor that seems a little too interested, and a dead body in the school, the Hardys have their hands full – especially when their ties to the murder victim pique police interest.

When things come to a head, it's going to be all hands on deck to make sure everyone makes it out alive.
