Eugene Fitch Ware (1841-1911) was a soldier, journalist, politician, historian, lawyer, poet, and served as Commissioner of Pensions in the Theodore Roosevelt administration.

Born in Connecticut in 1841, Ware's family moved in 1844 to Burlington, Iowa, where Eugene was educated in public schools and apprenticed in his father's harness making trade.

He enlisted in April 1861, at the firing on Fort Sumter, in Company E, First Iowa Volunteer Infantry. Subsequently he re-enlisted in Company L, Fourth Iowa Cavalry & was mustered out as captain, Company F, Seventh Iowa Volunteer Cavalry in June 1866. In the latter part of his service, he was an aide-de-camp successively to Generals Robert Mitchell, C. J. Stolbrand, Washington Ellett & Grenville M. Dodge--one of Sherman's trusted commanders.

Much of his 5 years in the military was spent in Sioux country, fighting in Indian Wars, during which Ware was badly wounded while on duty.

He published his exciting eyewitness historical account of his duty during the Indian Wars in "The Indian War of 1864; Being A Fragment Of The Early History Of Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado And Wyoming", in which he portrays the harrowing life of the US cavalry on the frontier during the American Civil War. The Indians used the strife, with the encouragement of the Confederacy, to try to stop white settlement on their ancestral hunting grounds. At this time, the Indians could still hold their own militarily since the repeating rifle, which gave the decisive edge to the white man, would not become common until about 1870 & military supply was confined to ox-drawn wagons; as the Transcontinental Railroad would not be completed until 1869. His eyewitness account of this struggle, the Indian way of life, & the overwhelming Western emigrant flow illustrates the impending doom of the various Plains Indian cultures, that would occur in the 1870's.
